

Sir Rusty's Nummy Reward

A first grade student wrote this great story about a Knight and a Dragon. The lesson is found in the book Sequence Stories by J. Moore. Take note of the great sentence starters and the very creative way the king's gold was obtained from the dragon.

Way off in a distant land lived a knight named Sir Rusty. King Matthias begged Sir Rusty to find his long lost gold so he set off to slit the dragon's gullet. Trotting along,

Rusty heard wolves howl while the moon glowed high in the sky. Beside the trail, Rusty spied scattered bones.
Hearing a snort, Rusty looked up to see a shadow covering the moon. Rusty's horse reared up as the dragon pounded to the ground in front of them.

Springing off his horse, Rusty lunged for the savage beast, with a shriek the dragon flopped to the ground, playing dead.
Running past the chicken livered dragon, Rusty snagged the gold.
In a jiffy, Rusty and his horse were flying to the palace.

Kneeling to King Matthias, the knight presents the stolen gold.
"Thank you, Sir Rusty, for challenging Grody the Greedy dragon. As your prize I will 347

© by J. Moore 1996

give you grass parge all the days you may live," decreed the King.